Claude Oscar Monet was born in Paris on November 11, 1840. He was the eldest son of a grocer, who hoped to have Oscar, as he was known in his childhood, follow into the family business. This, unfortunately for his father but fortunately for the rest of the world, was not to be. From a very early age Monet demonstrated a talent and a desire for art. Later in life he would say to a friend, I would love to paint as a bird sings. His natural tendency was strong enough that, after the family had moved to Le Havre for his father to enter more deeply into the familys wholesale grocery business, drawing lessons were added to the six-year-olds basic school curriculum. By the age of fifteen he was becoming quite well known for his mocking caricatures of both his teachers and local public figures. Demonstrating his familys business acumen, he sold many of these and made a tidy profit. Monets boyhood in Le Havre was marked by his love for the outdoors. He frequently roamed the rough northern coastline, (often skipping school to do so) and soaking up its scenic beaches and cliffs. He was fascinated with the shifts in light and color as the weather changed, a fascination that never left him and was to have a major influence in his art throughout his career. (cont)
